

In the past the Queen could enjoy a few drinks during the day (Image: Getty Images)

COVID-19

NEWS

POLITICS

FOOTBALL

CELEBS

TV

MONEY

EXCLUSIVE: Queen's Christmas Prosecco 'flying off the shelves' at Sandringham despite price tag

The Queen will have a taste of Sandringham after launching her own Christmas Prosecco at the Norfolk estate - the tiny bottles are just enough for one glass and cost a hefty £15 each.

By Russell Myers, Royal Editor

16:06, 21 Dec 2021 | UPDATED 18:16, 22 Dec 2021

COMMENTS

The Queen can't be at Sandringham this Christmas but she can still have a taste of the Norfolk estate after launching a Prosecco brand there.

Her Majesty has opted to stay at Windsor instead of keeping with tradition and welcoming family to Sandringham during the festive season.

But the 95-year-old sovereign could stock up on the 200ml bottles of vintage Prosecco, which she has started selling in the shop on her Royal Sandringham estate.

The tiny bottles of Christmas Prosecco, which are just enough for one glass, are decorated with a festival label featuring a robin, holly and fir trees and cost a hefty £15 each.

The Queen's own brand Christmas Prosecco ( 📷 Image: Bav Media)

The extra dry Prosecco is 11 per cent and produced in Italy for the Queen's Sandringham estate.

The Mirror revealed this week how the Queen's family would not take part in their traditional meet and greet with the public at Sandringham on Christmas Day due to the covid crisis.

Buckingham Palace confirmed on Monday that the Queen had made the "personal decision" to cancel her annual festive holiday to Norfolk due to surging covid rates across the country.